THERE'S A VAN CLUB UP IN Central Canada known as Southern Ontario Vans. Once a year they throw a truck-in at Molson's Campground near Barrie, Ontario, about 60 miles north of Toronto. I've always wanted to go but never was able to work it in . . . until this year that is. First let me start off by saying that I like Canada, Toronto in particular, and Canadian vanners especially. I remember at Butler One (the original Van Fair East) there were a bunch of Canadians there, so it just goes to show you that our northern brethren have been into vans just as long as many of us "old time" vanners from the East and Midwest and as I recall breezed near the activities half of the campground would catch on very quickly as to where the daytime activities were going down.

At the outset of this particular article I said that I favored Canadian truckers. That sounds like a patronizing statement, so let me qualify it with this conditioning statement. For the most part the Canadian trucks were okay. Nothing stupendously outrageous; mostly functional trucks built to withstand dog team winters. And I didn't see much "personality" developing during the day, possibly because I was out beating the bushes for good CVM feature material. I found some which you will see
